"As a work of art we place it high. Independently of any sum of plot the picture is bold, chaste and ornate, frequently pathetic, often heroic. The characters are drawn with great truth and variety, and the scenes are inimitable in color, which are carefully rendered. Here are men of the world thinking like these worldly men, and spouting their language. Yankees with their nationality, ladies with their taste, and all the rest of us, in a style of life which a thousand pictures could not have equalled."
